The Heart of a Scientist: An Atomic Physicist's Ordeal of Matter and Meaning

Presented by

J. Gary Sparks, JUNGIAN ANALYST

Friday, November 23, 7:30 pm
Parkdale United Church, 2919 – 8th Avenue N.W.

The discovery of quantum physics in 1927 marks a revolution in Western understanding. Wolfgang Pauli, one of the new physics' founders, began a life-long friendship with Jung in 1932. Throughout their lives two men discussed the parallels between modern physics and Jung's depth psychology of the unconscious. Friday's lecture will survey the resonant journeys of these pioneers, explore similarities in their creative discoveries and consider the connection between matter and spirit that they felt key to Western survival. In particular "The Heart of a Scientist" will investigate, as the backdrop to his dialogue with Jung, Pauli's despair over the devastation his science had prepared for Hiroshima and Nagasaki. The response of Pauli's dreams to his distress—as well as to still contemporary questions of erotic desire, conscience and the health of civilization—will according receive due attention during the evening. With slides and discussion.
